Scorn in the USA

If you didn't already suspect corporate capitalist America's uncanny resemblance to Hitler's Third Reich, you'll be utterly convinced of it after seeing Peter Aterman's slick and surreal brand of character-based comedy. Gifted in making the outrageous strangely believable, he presents an apocalyptic vision of corporate America.

This is mass society gone mad where Aztec priests are engaged to make a killing on the stock market in more ways than one, where Olympic figure skaters celebrate incest as crucial experience on the road to success. A glimpse at what the Golden age of consumerism has in store, this is deadly dark satire at its best.
